

What do you bring to the table? Urban Agriculture Manager

Poster made by: Kiritika Rana

What is a Urban Agriculture Manager?

Urban agriculture manager refers to people overlooking agricultural activities. There are groups of people to coordinate with organizations to plan, develop, and maintain the organizations.

Who should pursue career as a urban agriculture managers?

People interested in urban agriculture and management will be a great fit for this role. Individuals with backgrounds in agriculture, environmental science, or business management, or experience in community development or non-profit work are great as well. People who have an interest in sustainability and the environment will be great fits for this job because it will be more enjoyable.

Season 2

E
P
I
S
O
D
E

3

Isabella interviews Hilda

Education Pathway to become Urban Agriculture Manager?

The pathway to becoming an urban agriculture manager may depend on your future employer. Those some basic requirements include:

- 1. Bachelor's Degree - a degree in agriculture, horticulture, or environmental science would make sure you have a foundation in the field
- 2. Master's Degree - a degree in urban planning, and business management would make sure you have skills in project management
- 3. Professional certifications - some jobs require Certified Crop Adviser (CCA) certification and a Certified Urban Agriculturist (CUA) certification to show that you are serious about the job and field

How a typical days look through pictures:

